The closed door talks were held in the monarch's office with only Peres and members of his staff present. Saudi-owned Al-Arabiya television showed Jordanian TV crews gathered in front of the king's office at the Amman Royal Court. Credit: AP Peres described the meeting as "very good and important," according to Arabic language channel MBC. He described the meeting in high-level terms. Peres said that the two leaders "shared a unique understanding and a very important historic and diplomatic accomplishment," according to the report. The meeting followed a similar incident last week when Jordan reopened its embassy in the Israeli capital after Israel's previous ambassador, Sufian Abu Zayed, left after three months for undisclosed reasons. Abdullah, on Sunday, also attended the official ceremony in the southern Israeli port of Ashdod to mark the transfer of the first shipment of his country's first shipment of gas to Israel. In return, Israel suspended restrictions on the import of Jordanian natural gas. The gas deal is part of a reconciliation deal between Israel and Jordan, and was concluded in 1995. However, a series of bilateral agreements needed to be finalized before Israel could launch the pipeline project to cross the country's border with the Arab country and 570a42141b
