Learn about the alpha channel. The Magic of Contrast . Q: Shuffle list items in database I have a list of items that are stored in a database. I want to create a new, random list from these, but keep the same list order. I'm trying to make this as clean as possible, so I'm wondering if there's any code that can help me out? Also is this theoretically possible within a database? Example: randomized list: Revenge Happiness Hot Sword original list: Sword Happiness Revenge Hot A: If you want to know which items should be picked, given an already determined order, then you have to first sort them. If you want to pick items at random from a set ordered in a specified order, then you use a random iterator that maintains the specified order and picks items off it. If you want to pick items at random, but in a different order for every iteration, then you need to put the items in a separate table, and the random order there. // Copyright (c) 2016, 2018, 2020, Oracle and/or its affiliates.
