Field of the Invention The present invention relates to apparatus and a method for recording and reproducing information signals by using laser light as information signals, and also relates to a medium usable for the method. 2. Description of the Prior Art Heretofore, various types of optical disks for recording and reproducing information signals, utilizing the difference of reflectivity from the difference of thermal histories of the recording mediums, such as the magneto-optical disks and phase-change type optical disks, or the like, have been proposed. In the phase-change type optical disk, at least one of the two components of the recording layer is made of amorphous material, while for the magneto-optical disk, a magnetic film is formed between the substrate and the recording layer. That is, in the magneto-optical disk, the information signal is reproduced by detecting the change in the magnetic domain of the magnetic film by applying a magnetic field to the disk. In the case where information signals are recorded by utilizing the phase-change type optical disk, at least one of the two components of the recording layer is made of an alloy which has different melting points depending on the temperature of the laser light, and on the other hand, by raising the temperature at least to a temperature equal to or higher than the melting point thereof, the recording layer is melted and it then becomes the amorphous state. Since the melted portion of the layer has substantially the same reflectivity as that of the un-melted portion of the layer, a high contrast signal of higher signal-to-noise ratio (SN ratio) can be reproduced. On the other hand, when the laser light is irradiated onto the recording layer in the amorphous state, the heat affects the recording layer in the neighboring portions to raise the temperature thereof, and a pit corresponding
