Pressure-Regulated Assemblies of Tungsten Glasses and Aluminum With High Strength/High Toughness. High-strength-to-weight ratio fibers are in demand for the development of armor-plated vehicles and other applications, where high strength is required with only moderate weight. However, until now, the design of reliable fibers with simultaneously high strength and toughness has proven difficult. Here, we report the preparation of glass/metal assemblages consisting of 1.8 wt % yttria-stabilized tetragonal zirconia polycrystals (Y-TZP) reinforced with 1 wt % of single-crystalline ( $\gamma$ - and  $\delta$ -) tungsten (W) glass (3.5 at. % W) and composites of tungsten-reinforced aluminum (Al) alloys. Y-TZP had a compressive strength of >3 GPa at room temperature. The Al<sub>2</sub>W<sub>3</sub> glass is made by melting mixtures of alumina (Al<sub>2</sub>O<sub>3</sub>) and W powder in an electric furnace, and the resulting glass is hot pressing into the desired shape. Then, single-crystalline  $\gamma$ - and  $\delta$ -W are introduced to produce a composite by static compaction, which is then heated at 1300 °C to 1200 °C for the glass transformation, at 900 °C for the melting of the Al, and finally annealed at 450 °C. The resulting fiber has a diameter of 700 MPa, which is almost as high as that of monolithic Y-TZP.
