I need to be more specific to the code. I'll also need the date on which this code was uploaded. Basically though I want to be able to find out when each user was added. I'm looking for the ones that were added after a particular date. Many thanks, A: To do this, we first need to get a list of all users (ie the members of your site), and then work out the date that each user's account was created. This would be done by: getting a list of your site users using the following method to get the creation date:

TimeZone::getCurrent()->setTime(DateTime::createFromFormat("Y-m-d H:i:s", mysql_date("Y-m-d H:i:s"))) Hope this helps! Non-cancer cell toxicity induced by H₂O₂ and vitamin E: a comparative study using the SH-SY5Y neuronal cell line. Hydrogen peroxide (H₂O₂) is a highly reactive oxygen species (ROS) that has been implicated in the development of neurodegenerative disease and neuroinflammation. Vitamin E is a known antioxidant and is used as an approved anti-lipoperoxidation agent. The effect of H₂O₂ on SH-SY5Y neuroblastoma cells is investigated in the presence and absence of antioxidant vitamin E. Cell viability was assessed by the MTT assay.

The results demonstrated that the cytotoxic effect of vitamin E on neuronal cells is superior to that of H₂O₂. Vitamin E was found to act as a potent antioxidant and protect neuronal cells from peroxide mediated oxidative damage in SH-SY5Y cells.[Preparation of COS-rGO nanocomposite with enhanced antimicrobial activities and cytocompatibility]. Reduced graphene oxide (rGO) was synthesized by catalytic method and then coated with chitosan (COS) through electrostatic interaction. The properties and structure of prepared COS-rGO nanocomposite were characterized by SEM, TEM, FTIR, XRD, XPS, UV-vis and EDS etc. The results indicate that the hydroxyl, amine, carbonyl and carboxyl groups of COS can form covalent bonds with rGO, which will improve the dispersion of rGO in aqueous solution. Moreover, the morphology of .Social Trust on the Rise for Post-College Why does trust in the "system" run so high among the young? As a generation of technology "savvy," they are more skeptical of institutions and the established order. Matthew Nyhof is finding that people who didn't go to college are now confident they will get their jobs back. Matthew Nyhof has two graduate degrees, including a Ph.D. in social psychology. After growing up in a family where they "knew people who made their way in the world," Nyhof's mother didn't want him to go to college. "She felt like it wouldn't have been helpful to my long-term career prospects," he says. He is now an assistant professor at Ohio State University, where he studies social psychology and social neuroscience, particularly related to optimism and pessimism. "When I was a graduate student, I spent a lot of time in the library," he says. "A lot of questions have been rolling through my head ever since." Why does trust in the "system" run so high among the young? As a generation of technology "savvy," they are more skeptical of institutions and the established order. "If you want to change the world," Nyhof says, "you need to start by acknowledging that the world exists and change it from the bottom up." Still, that doesn't mean his own young adult life has been without its challenges. He has had to overcome stereotype-shattering experiences that made him feel discriminated against. Then he started working at a university to save money—and was shocked to discover that the people in the office seemed to assume that his family didn't have money. When he asked his mother how she had gotten through college without her family's help, she told him they had considered it a "responsibility" to take care of each other. Today, Nyhof is finding that people who didn't go to college are now confident they will get their jobs back. "People who grew up in poverty find it easier to believe that they're going to get their jobs back," he says. "What you're seeing is a shift. People growing up are more confident in the idea that
