While the resume is a great reflection of your skills and experience, it's definitely the interview that will either turn you into a lasting hire or bounce you off the list. How you look and feel when you walk into an interview is one of the most important aspects of the hiring process. However, the job hunt doesn't end once you have your foot through the door. You have to meet and impress the potential employer with your knowledge, vision and personality to set yourself apart from the crowd. But what if you're already well into the hunt? You've put in a ton of time and energy into preparing for the interview and job search. Not to mention the interview. So how do you take the next step in the hiring process? Well, there are some tips and tricks you can take advantage of that will give you the boost you need to turn your passion project into a long-lasting career. 1. Keep Your Resume Clean and Up-to-date It's not uncommon for potential employers to ignore the qualifications listed on your resume. After all, who is going to spend time reviewing it when they're probably already looking at the cover letter that accompanies it? In your cover letter, focus on why you're the perfect fit for the job, and include a few lines of your resume that summarize your achievements and career history. While the resume is your primary job application, it's a good idea to include a few lines in the cover letter that highlights the more relevant components of your resume. Here are a few ways you can do this: Include a heading that states something like "Summary of Resume" and highlight a couple of accomplishments you're most proud of on the resume. For the paragraphs that span your entire resume, include a line that states your motivation for applying for the job and a couple of sentences that summarize your qualifications and why you're the right candidate for the job. This will allow you to create a clean and concise resume that will impress the reader. 2
