Companies have been trying to raise US$16 billion of the total US$20.1 billion in credit which the government had approved to support the tech sector. Boosted by US and Chinese trade tensions, Chinese companies have been seeking out US$16 billion in fresh credit to pay for US$20.1 billion in state-backed loans approved by the Chinese government. The efforts come amid uncertainty over trade as the US Department of Commerce earlier this week proposed tariffs on US$200 billion worth of Chinese goods in an escalating trade war between Washington and Beijing. The state-backed credit reached a high of US$16.1 billion, after China Development Bank approved last month a US$15.4 billion credit to the tech sector. Representatives from the Chinese tech industry that are involved in the US market have also been upping their game, as China's top technology firms have been increasing their sales in the US and other countries to counter rising risks brought on by the trade war. The funding has helped boost Chinese exporters' shares in the tech sector to the current value of about US$126.1 billion, according to a Reuters survey of 63 companies. China has won business from tech giants like Alibaba Group Holding, Tencent Holdings and Baidu, as Beijing ramps up a battle to boost the share of local companies in cutting-edge technologies. "With the funding of US$16 billion, China is now the second largest recipient of subsidies after the United States," said a senior government source. CHINA VS WORLD The fund was unveiled in April to support early-stage companies and increase the competitiveness of Chinese firms in the tech sector, the source said. In recent years, Chinese companies have been investing heavily in the US tech sector, with a record US$256.4 billion of investment into the sector in 2016. The United States has also been pouring money into the tech sector, which has been hit by the trade war. More than US$3.6 billion in subsidies was provided in 2017, according to the US Department of Commerce. Last month, the Trump administration

Cells bearing the antigenic determinants defined by the monoclonal antibodies OKM1, MOC-1, MOC-2 (an idiotype of MOC-1) and MOPC-31C (an idiotype of MOPC-21) were examined in paraffin-embedded tissue from 20 cases of Hodgkin's disease. Foci of reactive histiocytes were found within the interstitial infiltrate of most lymphomas and within the lesions of some large cell non-keratinising and non-differentiated cell carcinomas. There was no evidence to suggest that any of the markers were restricted to Hodgkin's disease. The reactivity of the tumour cells was not associated with the degree of malignancy of the tumour or with the presence or absence of Hodgkin's node, spleen or liver involvement. In a number of cases a single positive cell or small cluster of positive cells could be identified in the tumour infiltrates. The largest cluster was seen in the suprabasal layers of an epidermoid cell carcinoma. Cells bearing only the idiotype of MOC-1 were identified in the tumour infiltrates of several of the cases, but were distributed throughout the tumour and were not restricted to areas of reactive histiocytes. In contrast, reactive lymphoid cell accumulations contained predominantly MOC-1 positive lymphoid cells. These findings indicate that Hodgkin's disease and other lymphoreticular proliferations may be associated with a reactive proliferative process in the cell types normally b7e8fdf5c8
