And, of course, spend quality time in a Photoshop tutorial because it will help you become a better, more skilled Photoshop user. ## Deselecting or Inactivating Layers The most basic means to manipulate an image is through the use of layers. When you edit an image, you're actually editing a copy of the image. This copy, or layer, is where the changes will take place. You can change the layer's properties and then save this altered copy back to the original image. However, if you desire, you can change an image and then place the original image onto a new layer without making any changes. The main drawback of using layers is that, even though an image is locked, you can't use any tools to edit it. To edit a locked layer, you must activate the layer.

the material that provides an attractive sound. In the first instrument that I put together, which is the trumpet, I used a flatwound bolt for the bottom, which after some experimentation I discovered adds a fair amount of bellow in the overall volume, which is good, because you really need a lot of volume and low pitch to make the brass sound as attractive as it does with the body that is totally molded of a solid horn. I got the flatwound and put it on there in the beginning of the design, and it just added to the volume, so I stuck with that. With the clarinet, I didn't want a solid horn, I used a pure tone glazed horn. I had an old clarinet in my collection that I had installed a reed into it, and I decided to put a thin layer of pure tone glaze on it. The tone is fantastic, it looks great, it sounds great, but it is really thin, so it is a tight fit up the bore of the clarinet. I find the only way I can get it to stay in a particular area and not move is to use some really thin clay and scrape off the ends, then put a little bit of glaze on it, then put more clay on it, and I'll keep that there and thin it down until I get it to the right thickness. It still sounds really well. It has a nice vibrato, and I can produce it almost anywhere. The third design I'm going to be talking about is what I call the Guitarian head, which is a steel resonator. I had this idea of making a trumpet that has a steel resonator with a very clear, deep timbre, but one that is also light and bright, so I built a prototype out of stainless steel tubing and a few varieties of tapers and wood laminations with slots in them. I found out that I had to have a really deep sound hole in order to get any kind of good output, so I decided to make one. It's a very interesting design, it is built out of half piece of stainless steel tubing that has very sharp corners that make it into a resonator. It has very sharp radii and it has about a 12.5 degrees on it. I made a prototype out
