Q: Is there a way to enumerate the properties of a C# class in VS2010? In particular, I am trying to write a static method that will return an enumerator for a class without having to reference a specific instance of the class. I would prefer this over iterating through all the properties and just referencing the generic properties, as I am dynamically creating classes and I do not know the number of properties that are going to be there. I just want to avoid hard-coding them all, but have not been able to come up with a good way to do this, other than just referencing the generic properties, I think. A: You could use the non-generic System.Reflection class as follows: `public static IEnumerable GetProperties(object o) { if (o == null) throw new ArgumentNullException("o"); var info = typeof(o).GetProperties(BindingFlags.Public | BindingFlags.Instance); return info.Where(p => p.CanRead && p.CanWrite); }` [Ortho-suture]. Ortho-suture is an innovative and innovative technology in plastic surgery. It has already led to the development of new prosthetic materials (tendon-fascia sheets, fibrin biogel, and dermal matrix) and in the concept of evolution for tissue engineering. In all these methods, the aim is to recreate and restore the continuity of the tissue of the implant interface. To demonstrate the concept and the potential of new materials and new techniques in ortho-suture for the great variety of disorders of the skin, a systematic literature search of computerised and manual biomedical database was undertaken. The literature shows a promising future for this new technology in the management of a large spectrum of tissue defects. Q: Electrical grid failed to start. Using 5v USB power source? I have made a small Arduino based device, and installed it on my home 3 phase electrical panel. Everything worked fine when using the arduino board provided with the ATmega328P Arduino core. I made a very simple blink circuit powered by USB and the power supply is ~100-150mA. Now I would like to use a 5v power supply and the ATtiny13A Arduino core, but the device is not working anymore. The arduino board has no power output on the 5v pin. My guess is that the ATtiny13A is unable to handle such low power, and that the Arduino's 5v power is somewhere transiting the home electrical panel. Do you have any idea on where to start looking? UPDATE I don't think my 5v power supply should be too high in voltage. Is there a config file that I should make on the board? The 5v power is from a DC to DC converter, it has a voltage of 5v, current of 3.3A and voltage for in/out is regulated. A: As said, the Arduino Uno is designed for 5V system, so if you want to use a 5V power supply, you need to provide some power. I would suggest you connect the power output from the converter to an Arduino clone which has a power jack connector (See: and see if the previous problem is solved. Also, if you use a 5V power supply, you can use a resistor to limit the current provided by the board, so a 100 Ohm resistor would be enough ($100/3.3 = 30$ Ohms). The power configuration of the ATtiny13A is mentioned in this sheet: Note that the current is 8mA when not powered, and 12mA when powered at 3.3V, so if you only need to power the board for a few hours a day, 12mA would be ok. And, this would allow you to run the ATtiny13A from a 5
