patients with multiple somatic diseases. However, the diagnosis and treatment of both, the psychopathology and the somatic diseases, is a challenge. This article describes the psychiatric diagnosis and therapeutic options of psychiatric disorders in patients with multiple somatic diseases. The diagnostic and therapeutic approach is especially based on psychotherapy and psychopharmacology.Predicting the Efficacy of Stand-Alone Dendritic Cell Vaccination against the Human Papillomavirus in Head and Neck Cancer Patients. Dendritic cells (DC) represent an attractive adjuvant for cytotoxic T lymphocyte (CTL) induction. DC vaccines are well tolerated and increase immunogenicity of tumor-specific peptides. Despite several reports, no consistent efficacy has been found. We evaluated the efficacy of stand-alone DC vaccination in patients with HNSCC by functional CTL assays. In 33 HNSCC patients with locally advanced or metastatic disease, DC vaccination was repeated after in vitro maturation with the HPV16-E6 antigen at baseline, 2 weeks, 3 weeks and 6 weeks. CTL response to E6- and E7-derived peptides was determined by HLA-A*0201/HLA-B*0702/HLA-Cw*0701 tetramer or MHC-multimer staining. Overall, 12 patients (33%) responded to the E6- or E7-specific vaccine and seven patients had a durable complete response. In addition, seven patients experienced complete remission after baseline DC vaccination. The median duration of remission was 12 months (interquartile range 7-18 months). Median overall survival for responders was 11 months (95% confidence interval 8-16) versus 14 months (95% confidence interval 13-45) for non-responders and 20 months (95% confidence interval 20-60) versus 18 months (95% confidence interval 16-24) for all HNSCC patients (P=0.34). Our results are in concordance with previous findings and confirm the feasibility and safety of DC vaccination in HNSCC patients. Notably, we provide evidence that on-treatment p53 status might be useful as a predictive biomarker for the efficacy of the vaccine.Q: A
