Sixty-eight patients were treated between 1975 and 1986 using open joint arthroplasty for ankylosing spondylitis. They had a mean age at the time of operation of 45 years and the duration of disease was an average of 42 years. Thirty-four patients had their operations at the same institution, and four had their operations elsewhere. Most of the operations (56 of 67) were performed in the thoracolumbar spine and nine in the cervical spine. Forty-three operations involved the lower two-thirds of the thoracolumbar spine, and 24 involved only the lumbar spine. Twenty-five of the operations (38 per cent) were performed in the cervical spine and five (8 per cent) were in the thoracic spine. The brachial plexus was explored in 42 cases. Twenty-seven patients had decompression of the cord for more than two months. Fusion to the posterior elements was combined with arthroplasty in 65 cases. There were nine dislocations, one early infection, and six nonunions. Eighteen of the 19 nonunions required revision. Of 34 patients who had followed-up radiographs, 31 were rated good or excellent and three were rated fair or poor. However, in 15 of these 33 patients there were no signs or symptoms of pain. Of the nine patients with two or more levels fused, the range of motion in seven was normal. The five patients with radiculopathy had a poor functional result in four cases. Three of the five patients with unilateral and two with bilateral arthroplasty had some relief of their pain. The incidence of complications is shown and the importance of early and careful follow-up noted./* * Copyright (c) Facebook, Inc. and its affiliates.
