Jmol is a new, free Java molecular modeling package. It was originally developed by the Max Planck Institute for Chemical Physics (Germany). It can provide you with more than just a 3D representation of molecules. It can also help you create molecules from scratch, edit chemical structures and much more. It has a very intuitive graphical user interface that is easy to understand. It has a small memory footprint and uses the well known and efficient open source Jmol library for performing the calculations. Jmol is free and open source software that was originally developed by the Max Planck Institute for Chemical Physics (Germany) and is maintained by a community of volunteers. We recommend Jmol in most cases because it's a very reliable and efficient tool to be used for common tasks related to chemistry and organic molecules.
